1960 AWARDS ARE HIGHLIGHT OF GALA DINNER

AMBASSADOR HENRY J. TAYLOR accepts posthumous award for his son, Henry N. Taylor.

...And So To 40th; Not A Beat Lost

The OPC (39th St.) closed its doors at 2:30 AM, April 15. At 12 noon the same day, the OPC (40th St.) opened its doors to a crowd of hungry members, and nary a beat was lost.

Saturday's buffet didn't want for even an olive. Luncheon had been prepared at the old Clubhouse and brought over by truck. Bar supplies were ample (see back cover). They had to be; the day turned out to be the biggest Saturday in OPC history with about 200 members turning up to inspect the layout. Asked his opinion about moving day operations and the huge crowd, Jimmy Menditto at the bar allowed he didn't have much to say, "except maybe, ye gods!"

Lu Pierlot, the Bulletin's M.E. got a cup of tea by "truck relay." Burner, pot, cups, and tea arrived by separate stages. The lemon was finally delivered on a silver tray.

Waiting at the door at 12 noon was the World Press Center's first foreign visitor. Arnold Kirkbride, British author and member of the Press Club of London, said he (Continued on page 6)

The huge crowd of OPCers and guests who gathered at the Waldorf Astoria for this year's 22nd Overseas Press Club's Annual Awards Dinner, April 14, were treated to a display of talent covering the very best in foreign news reporting for 1960.

At the same time, diners heard Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand, former President of the United Nations General Assembly, deliver a strong warning that the West can no longer continue along "the slippery course of a long retreat" in Southeast Asia. He added that the free world may have many sacrifices to make but "we will not escape them by postponement."

Satirist Bob Newhart, not to be outdone in foreign coverage, managed to work in Khrushchev, Eisenhower, an anonymous TV producer and the Incas. He was severely challenged as the night's jokester, however, when excerpts from the CBS Ed Stout award winning TV program "Trujillo: Portrait of a Dictator" was shown on a giant Vizmo screen behind the speaker's dais. Trujillo, in exceptional candid shots, displayed unintentional comic tendencies which kept his audience chuckling throughout the sequence.

Opera star Eleanor Steber showed that her reputation as "one of America's best-loved Metropolitan Opera singers" was well deserved. She sang selections from Puccini and Gershwin.

Topping the list for the Annual Awards was AP's Lynn Heinzerling for the best daily newspaper or wire service reporting from abroad. CBS picked up the best TV award for its news documentary "The Road Ahead," and Edwin Newman of "The significant aspect that goes through every presidential election since 1912 is the effort of the people to bring government closer to themselves," said Frank K. Kelly, honored guest at the first Open House (Apr. 18) in OPC's new headquarters.

Occasion was devoted to a review of national elections of the past 50 years, starting from Kelly's just-published book The Fight for the White House — The Story of 1912. Panelists, selected from OPC's politicos, included Julius Edelstein, long Administrative Assistant to Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, Steve Fitzgerald, political writer for Baltimore Sun, and James Sheldon, Information Director for the Democratic National Committee's Nationalities Division. Vice-President John F. Day arranged the program and moderated.

Kelly stressed the influence of Wilson's ideas on his successors, especially F.D.R. and J.F.K.

"The electors were moved by many of the same forces 40 years ago that move them today," said Sheldon, pointing to the religious and racial bias injected by the Klan in the 20's, and by other forces in 1960. "The difference is that the earlier appeal to bigotry was successful, but it was sidetracked last year — which shows that politics has made some progress."

"The way in which great history often turns on little things was illustrated by the narrow triumph of Wilson over Clark in the 1912 Convention, Edelstein observed, stressing the importance of detail in understanding political history.

"Frank Kelly is a man of accuracy," Steve Fitzgerald insisted. "If he says President Taft awakened on a grey morning, you can be sure he looked up the weather records to make sure it actually was a grey morning."

The speakers agreed on one comment on the Kelly book: "Buy it," they said.

All have been engaged solely in the normal pursuit of their job as news correspondents and have reported fully, fairly and objectively the events taking place in your country...."

Foreign Newsmen Protest

Foreign news correspondents in Katanga protested in "the strongest terms" about the expulsion of AP's Errol Friedmann.

In a formal note handed to President Moise Tshombe, April 9, the newsmen said: "we are surprised and alarmed that the Katanga government should act in a manner conflicting with the democratic principle of freedom of the press."

"Katanga owes much to the sympathetic and objective reporting by the world press," the protest note added.

Friedmann was expelled by the Katanga government April 7 on a charge that he misrepresented the facts about the anti-UN demonstrations in Elisabeth-ville the week before.

Friedmann, a native of South Africa, has been in Africa for AP since July and has scored some notable newsbeats. His latest was on April 4th when he was four hours in front with a story of the anti-UN rampage by Dataga troops in Elisabeth-ville.

Volunteers interested in working on the Bulletin, please contact Miss Pierlot at the OPC Bulletin office.

"wanted to be one of the first to raise a toast to the new club," and he was.

Although many members have expressed nostalgia for 39th St. ("besides, I can't stand all this space"), the Club has done an extraordinary amount of business over the first few days. Extra tables for luncheon and dinner will have to be placed on the third floor.

For the first month or so, members will miss the Club library which will remain at the old building until proper space is made available. Those looking for the working press room (and there have been many the past several days) will be accommodated during the coming week.
